UPMC Is Addressing the Needs of Communities and Accelerating Health

What is a Community Health Needs Assessment (CHNA)?

In 2022, UPMC completed Community Health Needs Assessments (CHNAs) for its licensed hospitals in compliance with IRS 501(r) guidelines. Each CHNA incorporates input from community stakeholders and public health experts, and identifies actions and implementation plans to improve community health.

• Listening to the Community

UPMC invited nearly 3,000 local and regional stakeholders to help identify their community’s most pressing health needs.

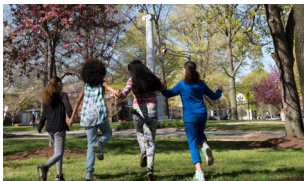

• Addressing Significant Health Needs

UPMC partnered with the University of Pittsburgh Graduate School of Public Health (Pitt Public Health) to conduct CHNAs for 28 licensed hospitals. Public health data findings and community survey results were synthesized to identify priorities at the local level, while supporting four key significant health needs across UPMC communities.

• Making a Measurable Impact

UPMC’s CHNAs identify important local health issues and support a coordinated, system-wide community health strategy that extends across the region. Through more than 3,000 programs, UPMC is out in the community — visiting fire halls, church festivals, and schools — and advancing health for local residents.

Reducing Health Inequities in Underserved Communities

UPMC recognizes a broad range of efforts are needed to address the factors that contribute to health disparities. Across the region, UPMC is addressing economic and social barriers to health, and deploying programs and initiatives that promote health equity. Efforts include promoting employment opportunities, connecting people with resources for food and housing, offering language assistance, extending medical care to unsheltered individuals, and providing free or subsidized transportation.

Expanding Behavioral Health and Substance Use Treatment Services

UPMC continues to address behavioral health needs through a wide variety of services. Efforts include expanding access through better integration of medical and behavioral health care, as well as programs in primary, pediatric, and specialty settings. To increase awareness and to support individuals impacted by substance use disorders, UPMC is deploying innovative methods to reach rural and underserved areas, taking care directly to patients in need.

Caring for Rural Communities

UPMC is pioneering innovative care models in rural communities. For example, UPMC Kane was the first in Pennsylvania to launch a Tele-Emergency Department, in which highly trained advance practice providers (APPs) at UPMC Kane coordinate with board-certified emergency medicine physicians at UPMC Hamot. Across the system, UPMC is making significant strides to expand access to specialty care by using telehealth and adding new facilities — connecting patients to UPMC’s comprehensive health programs, and focusing efforts on the unique needs of cancer patients, children, women, and seniors.

Meeting Community Needs During Times of Crisis

While navigating the complexities of the pandemic, UPMC continued to address identified health needs by developing innovative approaches and strategies to engage with communities. UPMC temporarily suspended or modified in-person programs to promote social distancing, educated the community about the health risks of COVID-19, increased access to telehealth services, established COVID-19 testing and vaccine sites, and worked with state and local leaders to deliver COVID-19 vaccines. UPMC also reached out to patients and members in underserved areas, and continues to mobilize resources in communities where health disparities are the greatest.
